BRAKE SHOES

Question: In Schild's Shop Manual, it says that if your drums are worn to their maximum that you may have to 'shim' your shoes. I've seen that Bratton's sell an oversize lining (but only 1/16" over) but have never heard of shimming the brake shoes. Any idea how to go about this? Answer: Your life and the dependability of your car depend on your brakes. If the wear on your drums are very much more than .060 oversize, the drums are too thin and will probably fade when you most need them. The oversize linings are 1/16" over, which is .0625 and could be used with a .060 oversize drum. I would first have your drums checked (measured) at automotive machine shop. Original drums are 11". By law you cannot have brake drums turned more than .060 ". If your drums are more than .070 over they will begin fading because of the heat on the drums. The drums will be too thin and cannot dissipate the heat. Many Model A's today have .100 wear on the drums. It's a very risky way to drive. Please check it out and replace your drums if necessary. Also, be sure to have your shoes arced to the drums when you replace the shoe linings. This will assure full contact with the drum. If you do not arc the shoe linings to the drum you can only expect about 20% to 40% shoe contact to the drum. https://mafca.com/tqa_c_brakes.html
