Tech Q&A – Lubrication CAPACITY https://mafca.com/tqa\_m\_lubrication.html

Question: I am working on a Model A that has not been started for some time and would like to check/change the oil in the differential and the transmission. The differential has two plugs - one on the bottom which I presume is for draining the existing oil, and one on the side which I presume is for adding new oil. My question is how much lubricant should I add? Enough to take it up to the second plug? If its more than that what is the best way to add it? I have the same basic question regarding the transmission. Once I have removed the cover of the gear box, how much lubricant should I add (i.e. how full should the gear box be)? Thanks for your help. -- J. W. Chambers

Answer: Add just enough fluid to the differential to bring the level to just below the opening. A good gauge is to insert your little finger to the first joint and it should have fluid on it when removed. The same goes for the transmission. Remove the filler plug on the side and fill with fluid until it comes up to just below the opening.

Capacities From the Ford Service Bulletins:

Page 375 Transmission: 1 pint; Rear Axle Car: 1.5 quarts

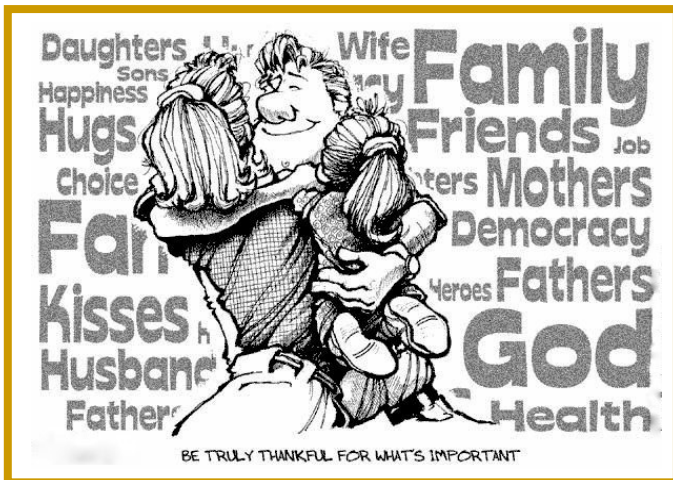

Page 227: 7-tooth Steering: 7.75 ounces

Los Olivos Day in the County Parade

We had six Model A's tour up from Santa Barbara to the parade & three A's joined us there. The Long Beach Model A club drove up to be in the parade also! It was a beautiful day! Some of us ate our lunches by our cars afterwards.

It's always fun to go looking at all the craft booths too!
