Question:

I just bought some replacement brake retractor (anti-rattler) springs but, unlike the ones I'm replacing, they seem to be curved too much at the ends (almost a W shape). The extra bends make the spring hang at an angle than doesn't allow the concave socket to engage the knob on the brake rod. It misses by about two inches. It looks like a defective spring compared to the old one but my supplier says that's the only kind he's ever stocked. Am I doing something wrong or should I try another supplier? -- Court Saunders

Answer:

I would try Bratton's Antique Auto Parts. You will find that if there is a quality part made, Walt Bratton has it. 800-255-1929. It is very important that these retracting springs fit correctly and slide on the brake rod without hanging up on the return action. -- Les Andrews, Technical Director
